Development of coursework materials for an on-line course in advanced equine behaviour

The Campbell Centre for the Study of Animal Welfare, together with Equine Guelph and the Office of Open Learning at the University of Guelph seek to employ someone under a contract term position to develop coursework materials for an advanced equine behaviour course for on-line learning. At a later point in time we will also be hiring people to help with the delivery of this and other courses to students pursuing a Certificate in Equine Welfare.

The ideal candidate would have advanced (e.g., graduate) training in equine behaviour or a related field and first-hand experience working with horses and a familiarity with the Canadian equine industries. Applicants should also have a sincere interest in helping horse owners with the practical application of knowledge about equine behaviour to improve the well-being of their animals.

To apply, please send your CV / Resume, a copy of your academic transcripts (initially an unofficial copy will suffice), and a cover letter outlining your interest in the position, your relevant background experience that make you a suitable candidate, to the contact below:
