Dr. Victoria Sandilands is a jack-of-all-trades in poultry welfare research, with work ranging from welfare of birds in furnished cages, humane killing of birds on farm, perching in laying hens and broilers, assessing walking style using a force, and the effects of housing style on keel bone damage.

She teaches poultry behaviour and welfare to MSc students and supervises BSc, MSc and PhD students in a variety of research topics. As the current president of the World’s Poultry Science Association – UK Branch, Dr. Sandilands’ aims of taking over the poultry world with her radical ideas of management have yet to come to fruition, but there is time yet!
