SOC*6100: Qualitative research methods
Fall 2017

The course aims to introduce key philosophical, epistemological, political and ethical issues central to qualitative research. It will familiarise students with the research process, to identify the research approach and methods of data collection and analysis. As part of the course, students will design their graduate research project, including data collection and analysis. The course will be organised around a collection of readings, student presentations, activities and discussion. Course evaluation will be based on a set of assignments throughout the course.