COURSE DESCRIPTION:

In this course we will analyze the meaning of sexuality in medieval Europe. We will focus on the importance of sexuality for individuals as well as for societal organization and ideology. We will analyze the question of sexual identities in the Middle Ages and examine in which ways sexuality and sexual identities are culturally constructed. We will discuss how sexuality formed and forms views on gender identity and social status. We will explore how sexuality helped define hierarchies in the medieval period.

The course is analytical and problem-oriented. Throughout the course we will encounter several different approaches to the history of sexuality. Through comparing differing interpretations of the various topics you will develop your ability to think critically. To critically assess arguments and assumptions that historians make about the past is a fundamental part of the course. You are also encouraged to develop independent opinions on the topics based on the knowledge you have acquired through close analysis of the texts.

Throughout the course we will focus on how we study medieval sexuality. We will start by examining both common sense and theoretical aspects of thinking about sexuality. Simply put, what do we mean by “sexuality” and “sexual identity” now and in the past? Do we believe that humans have always experienced sexuality in the same way? How much is sexuality and gender part of our identity? What are we born with; what changes over time? Many different types of sources are used in studies of medieval sexuality. But what do they actually tell us? How can we understand the differences between sources and between contrasting interpretations?

This course will allow you to explore the topic of medieval sexuality through scholarly works as well as primary sources. This course is seminar based and student discussions and debates in class are crucial in order to fully explore the material.
COURSE OBJECTIVES:

To develop and improve your:

- critical thinking and ability to assess and evaluate scholarly arguments
- ability to express arguments and opinions orally and in writing
- ability to analyze and interpret primary sources
- theoretical analysis of gender and sexuality
- knowledge of the importance of gender and sexuality in any historical society
- ability to examine historiographical differences and debates

REQUIRED TEXTS

The book is available at the University Bookstore. It is also available as an e-book in the library.

All other required texts are available on E-Reserve through the Courselink site.

EVALUATION:

- Participation: 20%
- Seminar presentation: 5%
- Written assignments: 75%

Participation (20%):

Students are required to attend classes and actively participate in discussions. It is essential that readings are done before class. The participation grade is not solely judged by quantity (though the number of times a student makes comments indicates active participation) instead participation is graded based on the level of preparation before class; ability to actively listen to other students and the instructor; ability to respond respectfully to other students; ability to further the discussion by asking questions and presenting other possible views and interpretations. The final participation grade will be marked out of 20.

Students will be asked to hand in a midterm self-assessment stating areas of strength as well as areas for improvement. This assessment will be used in order to provide feedback regarding the participation grade.
Seminar presentation (5%)

Each student will be responsible for leading the seminars during one week. This is done in pairs or in small groups of three. The seminar leaders will lead a discussion of the most important topics and issues and shall come prepared with questions to the other students. This assignment also includes making a very brief presentation of the primary sources we encountered that week. The presenters shall post a few questions on the discussion board for the other students the day before class. After the seminars the seminar leaders shall hand in a self-assessment and a peer-review (of the other student/-s) stating their strengths and weaknesses as seminar leaders, what they learnt from leading a seminar, how the communication between the seminar leaders functioned and whether the work was distributed equally. The seminar presentation will be marked out of 10. More information will be provided in class.

Written assignments (75%):

Students are required to hand in a total of seven written assignments (they shall be uploaded to the dropbox, no paper copy is needed). Six of these assignments consist of reading reports from weeks 4 to 12; they are worth 10% each. The first assignment (week 3) is mandatory for all to hand in. The due date for this assignment is Sunday September 25 at 11.59 pm (midnight).

Students can choose which other five assignments they want to write. They are to be uploaded to the drop box on the Courselink site before midnight (11.59 pm) Sunday the same week. The reading reports shall be approximately 5 pages. The assignments shall briefly present and evaluate the main arguments in the readings. If you are aiming for the highest grades you should also contextualize them by referring to theories on sexuality and gender and/or to other readings. All weekly readings must be discussed except the textbook (Karras) and the primary sources. References to the readings with specific page numbers are required.

The seventh final assignment is also mandatory for all to hand in. It consists of an evaluation of the primary sources we have read throughout the course. You may include sources we met in the articles or in the textbook. Students can choose to discuss either the topic of gender and sexual inequality; the question of sexual identities or a source criticism of different medieval sources. More information will be posted on-line and discussed in seminars. This assignment is worth 15% of the final grade and should be approximately 5-7 pages in length. References to the sources, primary and secondary, are required. The deadline for the eighth assignment is Thursday December 8 at midnight (11.59pm).

All assignments will be marked out of 20. A late penalty of 1 mark per day will apply (a day being 24 hours). The six weekly reading reports will primarily be graded based on: knowledge of the readings; clarity of arguments; a critical but fair assessment of the authors’ arguments and the ability to contextualize these arguments. The final assignment will be graded based on ability to synthesize and contextualize the various primary sources: that is the ability to connect the sources to readings throughout the course and the ability to present them in the framework of general theories on gender and sexuality. The final assignment will also be graded based on the ability to present arguments and counter-arguments.

Class discussions during this course will be based on tolerance and respect for others. We are all responsible for creating an environment that is safe and inclusive. This makes classes more fun and improves learning substantially. All students should feel comfortable to express their arguments and views even if they differ from the views of the authors, instructor or fellow students. However, heterosexist, homophobic, sexist, ableist and racist comments will not be tolerated.

I might also ask you to shut down your laptop if you seem too distracted by the riches of the Internet.
