Brief Course Synopsis:

The course will explore the social and cultural work that literary texts about illness perform. Fiction, non-fiction, poetry, theatre and film reveal narrative’s role in making healthcare graspable for practitioners and patients. The course postulates the doctor-patient relationship is based in storytelling, and considers life cycle events from reproduction through to death as medical journeys. Seminars will illuminate the recent field of narrative medicine, an approach to health care that fosters patients and health professionals’ telling and listening to complex, unique accounts of illness.
