Brief Course Description

This course is an introduction to philosophy through the study of social and political issues. Our aim will be to become familiar with the central theories in contemporary political philosophy, such as liberalism, communitarianism, feminism and multiculturalism. We will examine these theories in an effort to help us better understand and respond to a variety of social problems facing us today; in particular, we will try to find an answer to the question “what does it mean for governments to show ‘equal concern and respect’ to their citizens?” Other issues to be addressed include the balance between rights and freedoms, the relationship between citizenship and group diversity, and the idea of a ‘politics of difference’.

Course Format

Lectures: We will meet as a class twice a week during the winter term in Alexander Hall 100. Class time will be divided between lectures and class discussion. In order to be able to contribute to classroom discussion it is imperative that you do the week's reading prior to coming to class.

Tutorials: Additionally, you will meet once a week in small groups of about 20 students for a tutorial session, which will be led by a graduate student from the Philosophy Department (the method of evaluation for these sessions is detailed below).

Evaluation

1. Tutorial papers (10 x 2 = 20%). At your first tutorial session, your tutorial leader will teach you how to write a short philosophy paper, and at each subsequent session you will hand in one such paper. There will be an assigned reading for each of these tutorial sessions, and your paper should offer a critical analysis of some claim or argument from the reading. A tutorial paper should be 1-page (250 words) long, typewritten and double-spaced.

NB: there will be no tutorial sessions during the second last week of class, i.e. the week preceding Good Friday.

How tutorial papers are graded: You will receive 1 mark for doing a tutorial paper, which must be handed in at the end of the tutorial session in which it is due. In other words, there will be no letter or number grade given to your papers (which will be kept by your TA); it is a pass/fail assignment, and you will ‘pass’ so long as it is clear that you have done the reading and given thought to the claim or argument in question. You can earn a 2nd mark on your paper for participating in the tutorial sessions. If you participate (i.e. talk, share your views, etc.), then you should put a checkmark on your paper before handing it in. All papers handed in at the end of the tutorial class that have a checkmark on them will receive 2 marks. You will be encouraged to review your tutorial papers with your TA during his/her office hour.

- These marks are like participation marks, and as such there will be no opportunity to make them up – if you miss your tutorial, you lose the marks. In other words: no late papers will be accepted.
2. Mid-term test (35%). This will be an in-class test and will be on all the material covered up to the date of the test, including material covered in tutorial sessions. The test may include some definitions, true/false questions, short answer and short essay questions.
    - Students who are unable to write the mid-term due to medical reasons must submit a medical certificate.
  3. Final exam (45%). This will take place during the Final Exam Period as scheduled by the College of Arts (Saturday April 13th, 8:30 – 10:30, room TBA). The exam, which is cumulative, may include some definitions, true/false questions, short answer and short essay questions.
    - Students who are unable to write the final exam due to medical or religious reasons must follow the guidelines set out in Undergraduate Calendar.
