Brief Description of Course:

The course is intended as an introduction to metaphysics for advanced students in philosophy. We shall combine an historical approach with a systematic approach. We shall begin with a discussion of the difficulty involved in forming an adequate definition of “metaphysics”. We shall then proceed through selected writings of major ancient and medieval philosophers and theologians, focusing on particular “metaphysical” issues they address and tracing the development of the manners in which these issues are raised and treated. NOTE: While this initial “historical” component of the course may serve as a condensed review of major developments in the history of philosophy, its chief purpose is not historical, but thematic: it is intended primarily to provide the student the opportunity to explore at greater depth particular problems and topics that are generally mentioned only in passing (if at all) in historical survey courses. After completing these readings, we shall examine Kant’s critique of this earlier metaphysical tradition, focusing on his seminal treatment of the concepts of God, freedom and immortality, the clarification of which he identified as the defining task of metaphysics proper. Following our reading of Kant, we shall spend the final three weeks of the course analyzing in greater depth particular metaphysical issues that the members of the class have found especially interesting.

Required Texts:

All readings will be available on CourseLink and/or distributed either electronically or in hard copy by the instructor. Students may have to pay for copies of some of the selected readings, but the cost will be minimal. Further readings, especially from contemporary and current literature, will be recommended to the students throughout the course. If any of these are required, they too will be made available to the students.

Method of Evaluation:

There will be two in-class mid-term examinations and one final examination:

mid-term exam # 1 = Wednesday 9 October = 30%
mid-term exam #2 = Wednesday 6 November = 30%
final examination = (as scheduled by Registrar) = 40%

The questions for the two mid-term exams will be based on (i) the readings, (ii) the material covered in the lectures, and (iii) in-class discussion.

NOTE WELL: The questions for the final exam will be based largely or exclusively on the material dealt with in the in-class discussions of our final three weeks of classes.
