CALENDAR DESCRIPTION:
This course will further investigate traditional and photo based printing media. Computer graphics will be used to augment the design process.

Prerequisite(s): 3 of SART*2460, SART*2470, SART*3410, SART*3450, SART*3470
Restriction(s):  Registration is limited to students registered in the Art History or Studio Art specializations of the Bachelor of Arts program with an average of 70% in all ARTH and SART course attempts.

COURSE DESCRIPTION:
This is an advance level course and students are expected to prepare a written statement of intent which outlines the main ideas they will be working with as a theme to be developed throughout the various print projects.

This course involves the development of image and content within the discipline of all the main printmaking media. Students are encouraged to experiment with the different print media to develop a sophisticated control of graphic processes. Projects will be set in order to explore the use of specific techniques. Experimental techniques such as photo transfers, relief transfers, reduction printing, multi-colored printing and photographic print techniques will be introduced to offer a wide range of processes. Computer graphics will be discussed for producing photo-etching, photo-lithography and photo silkscreen printmaking. Students will be introduced to the HP Lab in Zavitz room 402 and will be expected to use the large format printer to output their photo positives for photo printmaking. Some experience with Adobe Photoshop will be required to design images suitable for working with four color separations, spot colors, to color greyscale images. Some classes will be conducted in the HP Lab on scanning images, working with Adobe Photoshop to cover these aspects of working with photo images.
It is expected that all work will be thoroughly researched and preliminary designs composed before the execution of the print matrix is attempted. Full-scale design roughs will be required for multi-color work, so that complex color separations from the computer or made by hand are planned with accurate registrations from detailed key line drawings. A high level of technical proficiency will be expected in editioned work. One copy of the plate/block/screen or stone will not be considered an acceptable exploration of the print properties of those images.

Scheduled critiques will focus on the sophistication of image and content. Finished projects will be presented for class critiques. Experimental or trial prints will be discussed during classes as works in progress. Students should strive to produce work that conveys a thorough understanding of the technical processes, together with a meaningful intellectual content. Emphasis will be placed on developing prints that convey strong ideas and well-designed images. One copy of each print worked on during the course, will be handed in to the print technician for inclusion in the Print Study Collection.

Appreciation and discussion of original prints in the School’s collection will be conducted. Lectures will introduce modern print masters and the print workshop system.

A research paper will be prepared on an artist of the student’s own choice who may be represented by a work in the Print Study Collection. The paper will be presented to the class and should include images, plus two typewritten pages of text which reviews and critiques the prints. A Power Point presentation or slide show of images is the accepted method of presentation. The type written paper will be handed in after the presentation as well as the digital file on disk, saved in MS Word/Power Point format.

- Knowledge of traditional print media
  - Gain skills in printing various traditional and modern print media
- Understand a graphic aesthetic inherent in printmaking media
- Gain skills in computer graphics for advanced printmaking.

1. The overall quality of the work.
2. Innovative interpretation of the print media and originality of the idea or concept.
3. Technical proficiency. Work must demonstrate a high level of printing skill.
4. Regular attendance, participation in class work, discussions, critiques.
5. Presentation of finished work. Finished work must be arranged and presented in a professional manner. All deadlines assigned for various projects should be met, in particular, at the close of the term when the final portfolio is presented for evaluation.
