Course Description:
Taking philosophy in a general way to be the investigation of the most fundamental questions in various fields, this course aims to examine questions in relation to social and political areas of human interaction such as what is justice? What is a just state? What is the political? How should we understand the relation between political authority and individual liberty? What is democracy? Is the law the instrument of justice, or the tool of powerful interests? What is civil society? The answer to these questions will be sought, first, by a study of canonical texts of Western political philosophy which will include both ancient and contemporary contributions, and secondly, by a discussion of current controversies as found in the court cases and news. By the end of the course, students not only will have a sense of main topics and issues in social and political philosophy but will also be able to examine and analyze such arguments as found in their everyday life.

Course Objectives:
By the end of the course the students should be able to
- Have a good grasp of the history and the range of social and political theories.
- Be able to identify, critically examine and assess social and political issues.
- Be able to develop and formalize their own thoughts on social and political issues.

Required Text:
Students are responsible both for the textbook material and the lecture material.

Course Evaluation:
1) Two tests, each worth 25%
2) Critical Summary 15%
3) A final exam worth 35% (8:30-10:30, 11 April)

1) Prior to each test and the final exam a comprehensive list of questions drawn from material discussed in class will be given to the students so that they can focus their preparation on these questions. The questions for both tests and the final exam will be taken from this list.
2) The critical summary assignment is a one-page double-spaced text, where the students aim to capture and relay the gist of the reading of the week (either the Mon. reading or the Wed. reading). The critical summary should end with one question that the student raises about the reading. The summaries will be collected every Mon. in class and will be handed back to the students in their next tutorial session. The summaries will be marked by the TAs assigned to each tutorial group. Each critical summary that earns a “Pass” gets 1.5 marks. You are expected to hand in ten to earn the total of 15% mark for this assignment. For CS to count you need to be (and remain) in class.

Other Rules
