When deciding to go back to school to get a Masters I had three key goals in mind.

1. I needed to re-educate myself and become more current. I felt the job market was such that having a Masters would be a real benefit when looking for any new opportunity.
2. I have always been intellectually curious, had a passion for business, and wanted to keep learning.
3. I knew I wanted to teach at the post-secondary level and knew a Master's degree was required.

I chose the University of Guelph's MBA, as it allowed me to achieve my goals by enrolling in the distance learning stream, something that would fit my lifestyle and career obligations. The focused modules, with one subject at a time, also made a lot of sense. I also felt the specialized MBA that U of G offered fit my background and experience.

I believe the decision I made was the right one. I am teaching at the post-secondary level, something I could never have done without the degree. My thirst for knowledge has also increased. Learning is a fluid process, one that should never end.
