The Tri-University Graduate Program in History combines the faculty and resources of three of Canada’s premier universities. With over 60 graduate faculty in the program, we are able to provide courses and supervise research across a vast range of areas. At the same time, through small seminars, close student-professor relationships, teaching assistantships and scholarships held at one of our three participating campuses, we maintain the atmosphere of smaller, more intimate educational institutions.

Our PhD program focusses on eight major fields: Canadian History, Cold War Era History, Early Modern European History, Medieval History, Modern European History, Scottish History, War and Society, and World History. Our faculty’s numerous areas of interest for research and graduate teaching include the Atlantic world, the history of crime, culture and entertainment, family and youth, gender and sexuality, health and nutrition, imperialism, indigenous history, military history, politics and international relations, religious history, rural history, urban history, the history of science and the environment, and tourism history.

PhD Program

Each year we accept up to 20 new doctoral students interested in our eight major fields. All eligible students receive substantial multi-year financial support, all are provided with teaching assistantship opportunities and all are offered a course of their own to teach in a mentored setting. Our students generally move through the field completion phase of their program in one year, and they devote the majority of their studies to their own research, teaching, and writing. With its solid research orientation, our program is attractive to students interested in academic and non-academic careers. Through our first-year field seminars, extensive teaching opportunities and professional development courses, our program provides superlative preparation for the academic job-market.

MA Program

With an average of 20 MA seminars offered each year, we provide one of the most extensive ranges of graduate courses in Canada. All eligible students in the program receive guaranteed financial support in the form of teaching assistantships and scholarships. In our flexible program, students complete their degree through coursework, or in a combination of courses and a major research paper or thesis. With over 20 faculty in each of Canadian and European history, 6 in medieval, 6 in American, and 10 in non-western history, students are assured supervision in the areas that interest them.
