Description

IDRC and the São Paulo Research Foundation (FAPESP), a state-level scientific granting council in Brazil, signed a cooperation agreement in December 2017 to support joint research projects to develop new opportunities for youth. The agreement's primary goal is to support knowledge creation and enhance the research capacity of institutions based in the state of São Paulo. FAPESP and IDRC have shared interests in creating new opportunities for vulnerable groups. For their first collaboration, FAPESP and IDRC are launching this call to generate knowledge, innovation, and evidence to foster the economic inclusion of marginalized youth in Brazil and other Latin American and Caribbean countries.

This Call invites research proposals focussed on Marginalized Youth and Economic Opportunities.

The objective of this Call is to support the generation and systematization of knowledge, innovation and evidence to foster economic inclusion for marginalized youth in Brazil and other Latin American and Caribbean countries. The call will identify promising innovations and support piloting, learning and evaluation. It will also identify innovations that are being implemented and that can be scaled up. The proposal must build a strong learning and evaluation agenda, both for projects piloting new ideas as well as those which propose scaling-up promising interventions. The learning and evidence generated is expected to inform policy debates on what works best to foster the economic inclusion of the most marginalized youth in São Paulo and beyond.

Grants funded by the IDRC-FAPESP partnership are expected to respond to the following specific objectives:

1. Support social innovation, out-of-the-box policies and grassroots practice to foster the economic inclusion of the most disadvantaged youth;

2. Generate evidence on what works to foster vulnerable youth economic inclusion;
3. Foster collaboration between researchers and implementing agencies so that practice and policies are informed by evidence;
4. Contribute to policy debates on national and subnational policies and efforts to address economic exclusion among the most disadvantaged youth;
5. Promote knowledge to foster the implementation of public policies of social relevance, when feasible.
