Interested in sharing what mental health means to you?

An honours thesis study being conducted through the Department of Psychology is seeking upper-year University of Guelph student participants who are interested in participating in a 35-minute interview about what they think mental health is, and what it means to them.

Sample questions include:

What is mental health? What does mental health mean to you? What does it mean to be mentally healthy? What does it mean to not have mental health?

Participation will involve interacting one-on-one with a female student researcher.

If you’re interested in participating, please email Meghan Corbett at mcorbe02@uoguelph.ca or visit the Office of Research’s Participant Recruitment Site for more information.
