Excerpt from the honorary degree citation:

William Hogarth served with distinction for 16 years as director of education for the York Region District School Board before retiring in December 2009. Throughout his 39-year career as an educator, Hogarth was a deeply committed advocate of public education. As director of education, he demonstrated an unrelenting focus on improving student achievement, not only through classroom instruction but by building innovative programs and partnerships to promote healthy families and communities in York Region. He understood the need for a strong relationship between the community and school board, to identify at an early age students with challenges and provide the assistance they need. To this end, he became founding director of the Community Alliance for York Region Education in 1997, a community-based organization that has leveraged considerable business and government support for programs and initiatives regarding anti-bullying, student leadership and early literacy. In 1999, Hogarth became founding chair of the York Region Advisory Forum on Children, Youth & Families, a coalition of more than 65 community organizations that support and promote optimal child development. On his retirement, Hogarth left a legacy of a radically transformed school board whose young people are now among the most literate and highest school achievers in Ontario. His innovations are being emulated by school districts across Canada and
